

The Race for Dixie

BY: SELDOM237 (R-DX)

The Election has started to heat up, and so far, it's still anyone's game

This election is proving to be just as contested as expected. Democrats, Republicans, and Civic People's Parties are putting their full weight into several of the different races. And now, it appears there's a hope on the horizon for the right-leaning parties. In this race, at least in the opening days, it is starting to look favorably for both the Republican and Civic People's Parties.

Although I'm here to only talk about one. One race that I've been involved with myself, personally.

The State of Dixie's race for the governor's mansion, where the race has been close since the start, is proving to be difficult for the Democrats to lock down as a win. And turn one and two are proving that, with the Republican Party's candidate u/MrWhiteyisAwesome (R-DX) and his Lt Gov u/Cstep_4 (R-DX) gaining a total of 6 points against the Democrat's candidate, Junior Senator of Dixie u/Tripplyons18 (D-DX) and his choice of Lt Gov, u/alpal2214 (D-DX). The current balance of the race is 53%-47%, in favor of the Republicans. Despite his efforts, Senator Tripp seems to be falling behind in his quest to secure the governor's mansion, something he must've thought was preordained. After all, he had the endorsement of the old governor, by getting appointed junior senator merely days before his bid for Dixie's highest office began. I've spoken about this before, the power play made by Dixie's Democrats to attempt to keep the highest office. And even if he didn't, if I may venture an opinion, and feel free to correct me if I'm wrong, he didn't expect the race to be this contested. And I doubt he expected Whitey to be leading at this point in the race.

Now, it is early, and much can change. In the other parts of the Dixie race, the Republicans do have ground to make up. In the Assembly race. We've lost ground recently. But in fact, so has every other party in the race. I say party, because there is one person in the race that has done incredibly well as of late. Independent candidate for Dixie State Assembly, CryDefiance (I-DX). He's been up consistently throughout the whole race. In fact, he now has more points than both the GOP and the Civic People's Party. He's now sitting at 24% in the polls, whereas us Republicans are sitting at 20%, and the CPP at 7%. I will not pretend our situation is that good at the moment. We are down points. But I do have faith in our ability to win. The Democrats have been losing ground as well, and they've been spending a lot more money than we have. Compared with the Democrats $964 dollars on hand versus the Republicans $3,947 on hand, and for good measure, the Civic's $2,344, the right leaning parties have a good reserve of firepower to be used against their opponents. We are ready to fight back, and make sure we gain ground against the Democrats.

The race in Dixie has been on national display for a while. Both the players in the governor's race have become well known for their stances on various issues. In my opinion, the race in the South is a rallying cry, and a symbol. It's called several first time candidates to the race, like myself, for example. And I believe that the outcome of the race will be a beacon to the United States. If the Democrats win, then it will likely serve to cement their dominance over the nation for at least another election cycle. If the Republicans win, then it will display that the Republicans are on their way back up, to contest the left on the national stage.
