Stephen Nedoroscik proved himself to be the Clark Kent of the pommel horse at the 2024 Olympics and has ignited the flame in spectators globally going viral via social media memes. In case you have been offline for a summer tech detox session, here's what the rest of the planet was experiencing together this past week live from Paris:

"the Olympic gymnast helped propel his team to win bronze at the men's gymnastics team final at the Paris Olympics — their first medal in 16 years. While the team is composed of five men — including Paul Juda, Fred Richard, Brody Malone and Asher Hong — Nedoroscik was the only member to qualify for a single event — pommel horse — at the team final on July 29, whereas his teammates each performed across the other five events. Despite his seemingly smaller role, his high score ultimately clenched the team's bronze win."

We were anticipating and living for moments and stories like this that the Olympic Games showcases every 2-4 years. In true Olympic fashion and spirit this was the whole vision of it's founder Coubertin, when he 1st advocated for the games centered on a number of ideals about sport. He believed that the early ancient Olympics encouraged competition among amateur rather than professional athletes, and saw value in that. The ancient practice of a sacred truce in association with the Games might have modern implications, giving the Olympics a role in promoting peace. This role was reinforced in Coubertin's mind by the tendency of athletic competition to promote understanding across cultures, thereby lessening the dangers of war. In addition, he saw the games as important in advocating his philosophical ideal for athletic competition: that the competition itself, the struggle to overcome one's opponent, was more important than winning.[28] Coubertin expressed this ideal thus:

L'important dans la vie ce n'est point le triomphe, mais le combat, l'essentiel ce n'est pas d'avoir vaincu mais de s'être bien battu.

The important thing in life is not the triumph but the struggle, the essential thing is not to have conquered but to have fought well.

SkillVill carries this torch, by providing a space, like an Olympic Training Center and NBC global broadcast of the action, where we can come together globally in this spirit of these ideals to promote peace and celebrate the human spirit over winning. SkillVill quietly announced the launch of the #Elect-avists Channel on SkillVill, starting July 20th leading up to the Opening Ceremonies in this summer's Paris 2024 Olympics, to challenge the spectators on social to get in on the action and bring YOUR skills and super powers TOGETHER 🦸.

We all face challenges in life, when a limitation is being placed on us or working towards a goal and just can't figure it out. Imagine if we turned this inspiration from the athletes' stories and historic moments happening that we "ti chi" that energy into peace and collaboration of the entire world and help each other figure it out peacefully. We invite everyone to join us in this challenge, to transform these experiences, unite our unique super powers and do something towards our collective goals. It's the ultimate celebration of the human spirit and freedom to live peacefully together. We're taking the lead, the first step to remove the 4th wall of the Olympics, and give YOU the fans the tools to bring your super powers and skills to act together for peace.

Our 1st movement, calls for everyone in the audience, the fans, the families, even the athletes when their events are done, accept this challenge by posting the #scrolling2voting hashtag with your posts when you are carrying this spirit forward. We all can put on our Olympic Game Faces For Freedom and start using social media challenges and fun digital fan experiences to call for peace and freedom!

It's an opportunity to rally the fans on this global stage to leap off their seats into movements that they believe in all around the world. We want to help everyone to connect, collab and level up their social challenge skills together.

We all can stand together for freedom. We hope to keep this Olympic torch lit long after the Olympics by passing it to YOU, our fellow global citizens, to connect, collab and level up together peacefully. Let's break the limits and attacks on the human spirit and help each-other reach our ultimate human potential in life. Not because we can but because it's exciting, fun and rewarding when we achieve it together.

We can't wait to see how YOU will apply your social media skills for good.
