Investigate the World; Develops a position based on evidence from sources that considers multiple perspectives, and draws reasonable conclusions in response to a global question.

For this project, we were supposed to write an essay that consisted of exploring a question or problem from several perspectives that pulls research from at least 20 sources with at least 2 of them being from a series of stimulus materials. These pieces of stimulus materials would all share a common theme, this year being resiliency, and your topic would include the theme of that year in some way. I wrote my essay on the significance of resiliency in the civil rights movement.

This falls under the ISSN domain of “investigate the world” as it required me to go in depth finding sources for a significant historical topic. I also had to ensure all sources I used came from highly reputable places to ensure reliability for my essay. This and the IRR assignment I had to do earlier that year for AP Seminar were by far the greatest examples of research or world investigation that I did Junior year.

I was glad to have this project as a chance to learn more about the civil rights movement. I’ve obviously heard about it a number of times before in different history class but it’s always a really important period of time in history so it’s always nice to enhance my understanding of it further.
