This horrifying post has been gaining attention on social media. One cartel publishes a chilling video that goes viral.

On June 21, 2022, Héctor de Mauleón, a renowned Mexican writer and deputy director of Nexos magazine, shared a startling video on Twitter. This 53-second clip revealed the presence of the Jalisco New Generation Cartel, commonly known as the C-J-N-G, in full force.

In the video, members of the cartel were prominently displayed, donned in bulletproof vests and wielding high-grade weaponry. They arrived in the neighborhood in a convoy of luxurious vehicles, showcasing both their financial and military power.

While some individuals concealed their identities with masks, others appeared carefree about revealing their faces. To leave no doubt about their allegiance, the initials of the cartel were boldly emblazoned on their vests.

In the video, several men can be heard shouting a phrase in Mexican Spanish, which translates to "We're here and we're not leaving." Evidently, they displayed no concern about the presence of law enforcement.

To date, this video has garnered significant attention on Twitter, amassing over 10,000 likes, 7,000 retweets, and nearly 2,000 comments. Furthermore, on YouTube, the video has accumulated more than 3.7 million views and received over 6,000 comments.

One Twitter, one user also wrote: “How is it possible that this #ComplicitGovernment abandons us at the mercy of these evil criminals and says that it is better for a stronger one to dominate over the others?”

To sum it up, this user said: “What impunity, thanks to this 4th Government... it is not in vain that in this six-year term, the number of violent deaths of past Governments has already been exceeded, and respect for the army and G.N has been lost.”

As the video gained viral traction, concern mounted among users regarding the safety of the individuals within the location, believed to be El Volantin in Jalisco. One user speculated that the C-J-N-G may have backing from the Lopez government, raising questions about the reasons behind their actions and their significance.

The primary question on everyone's mind is: What motivates them to act in such a public manner, and what are their ultimate goals? From a military perspective, this can be seen as a blatant display of force meant to intimidate potential adversaries by showcasing their capabilities.

Overall, the C-J-N-G is implementing this demonstration for their own benefit. It was revealed that their intention was to displace the Los Pájaros de la Sierra cartel from that region. The Los Pájaros Sierra cartel was originally a faction of the C-J-N-G under the leadership of Ernesto Mascorro Martinez, also known as El Chaparro.

Over the years, they had played a crucial role in assisting the C-J-N-G in gaining control over specific territories in Mexico. However, their conflict began when members of the C-J-N-G killed

El Chaparro's brother. This act of betrayal deeply wounded El Chaparro, prompting him to establish the Pájaros Sierra cartel as a separate entity.

Subsequently, both cartels have remained locked in a bitter feud. The situation escalated to a point where the government had to intervene by deploying personnel from the National Guard, Ministry of National Defence, as well as state and municipal police in an attempt to resolve the issue. However, these efforts didn't seem to significantly impact the operations of the cartel.

The world of drug trafficking in Mexico is a violent and brutal arena, with various cartels vying for supremacy. The C-J-N-G, led by Nemesio Ruben Oseguera Cervantes, also known as 'El Mencho,' stands out as one of the most dangerous cartels in Mexico.

In comparison to other long-established cartels like the Sinaloa cartel and the Gulf cartel, which have been active since the 1980s, the C-J-N-G began their operations in full force in 2010. Their leader, El Mencho, is now prominently featured at the top of both America and Mexico's most wanted lists.

The C-J-N-G has gained a notorious reputation for its violence and boastful announcements. El Mencho's leadership has enabled the cartel to function with the same efficiency as other well-established cartels. In addition to being well-equipped, C-J-N-G fighters are known for their extensive training and exceptional skill in operating sophisticated weaponry.

Despite the C-J-N-G's conflicts with rival cartels and law enforcement agencies, they occasionally present themselves as a righteous organization. However, as one might expect, their actions often reflect a brutality that is far from righteous.
