

How it works

In Full Pinyin (input method), if you type two letters, a selection of two-character words would come up where the first character starts with the first letter you typed and the second character starts with the second letter you typed. You are able to make any word you want be top priority by typing it repeatedly. You can type the full pinyin below to get the desired word in place, and then you will get that word by typing two initial letters and then spacebar to pick the top priority word.

Note that some words we need are not actual words in Chinese, so will not initially show up even if you type the full pinyin. You can still get them to top priority by entering the full pinyin regardless, then scrolling past all of the two character words into the single characters, then look for the first character you want, select that, then look for the second character you want and select that. The second time you attempt to type it, it should be added as a new two character "word".

Sadly, you cannot type any single character you want with only its first letter, because it is not possible to change the priority order if you enter only one letter. However, if you enter the full pinyin of a character, it is possible to change the priority order by typing it repeatedly. Bucket and bow contain only one character each, so you must first type your desired character followed by any character you want as one two character word, indicated by the question mark below, and then delete the second character. Crossbow also only contains one character, but in that case the desired character 弩 is only two letters in pinyin, so you can simply type that in full.

There is no junk unless otherwise stated.
