Special Observer: “Red Fox” 88730499/AR1

Overview: On the 22nd of September 2025, an earthquake in Mexico had occurred, which revealed a cavern, seemingly artificially carved out. First reports of strange findings came from an archeologist who found a strange shrine, along with several artifacts of possible cultural or religious significance. The archeologist in question was taken in for questioning, and amnesticated, with the cover story being a hospital treatment after being injured by local wildlife during a field trip.

Parathreat Evidence: The area appears to be a massive gateway to another realm, or a shrine. In front of the large archway is a massive ritual circle, with unknown runes engraved on it with a red glow-in-the-dark substance of as yet unknown origin. Next to the archway, pinned to the wall, is a golden stand, mounted on which is a piece of parchment, written on which are inscriptions, in an unknown language, using the same red material. In the area of the shrine are four massive knight statues, with their blades growing blue, with cyan smoke manifesting in their area. Upon verification, the smoke and glow were deemed harmless.

Suggested Response: Keep the area under surveillance, and send PTOLEMY researchers to the dig site. Many parts of the worship area might still be buried, which might reveal more artifacts for study.

Encounter Report/Enemy Description:
We arrived on scene when we received info about the earthquake and the shrine being unearthed. There was water flowing, bioluminescent plants and the aforementioned shrine. We found no signs of life, but found a lot of inscriptions, books, and a ritual circle, in the middle of which was a brazier with a crystal of unknown purpose and composition. Once the area was sweeped, we called for PTOLEMY researchers to set up an outpost in the area to study the area.

Results:
Success. The shrine area is safe for entry and study. Any significant findings are to be sent to the 225th Arctic Corps FOB in Pinewood, Saskatchewan.

Recovered Footage

The ritual circle found in the center of the shrine / gateway. It has inscriptions that are yet to be translated.

Statues found in the shrine area. The swords on each statue give off a blue glow and fog emitting from them. They were deemed safe for interaction.

The crystal found at the center of the ritual circle. The skulls depicted on the brazier are suspected to have a connection to the Sarkic Cult, though the runes on the ritual circle seem to contradict this theory.

A piece of parchment, found lying in front of one of the statues. It appears to depict an artifact that might serve as a key to translate the rest of the inscriptions in the area of the shrine.

A piece of parchment, found hanging on the wall of the archway. It is yet to be translated, but the image seems to resemble several realms connected together, supporting the theory that the structure is an ancient gateway to other dimensions.

Threat ID:
CTT-1034-Templum-Kapala “The Crimson Gate”

Authorized Response Level: ONE

Description:
The area within CTT-1034-Templum-Kapala consists of a cavern, suspected to be carved out artificially, with an underground river flowing through, located in the mesas of Mexico. The primary area consists of a large archway, in front of which is a ritual circle and knight statues, made out of a mix of Basalt and Granite, while the brazier in front of the archway seems to be carved out of animal bone. Carbon dating of this material suggests that this area was built around 5000 years ago. In the area of the archway, many pieces of ancient parchment, books and inscriptions were found by assessment team 1571, AKA “Dune Sweepers “, during initial discovery. Some of them were brought to the 14th Infantry FOB for initial assessment of the items’ integrity, so that they can be sent to the 225th Arctic Corps FOB for a full analysis and study.

In the center of the ritual circle, a crystal hovers above the brazier via anomalous means. Removing the crystal seems to cause no adverse effects, and several were found in the area. Just like the rest of the structure, it was carved artificially. Subjects interacting with the crystal suffer auditory hallucinations as long as the crystal is held by hand. Once placed back in the brazier, it returns to its hovering state, floating in the same exact spot as before.

Rules of Engagement:
Excavation teams will be dispatched to uncover more of the structure, or possibly artifacts of cultural or religious significance, or even potential weapons, should any be found. Should the gateway be opened, dimensional cartographers will be sent in to get the “address” of the dimension the gateway leads into, so that the portal can be opened elsewhere, using the Scranton-Krieghoff Dimensional Anchor.

Addendum 1: Excavation Results

On the 23rd of September 2025, excavation of the buried areas of CTT-1034-Templum-Kapala was finished. The uncovered areas were filled with various types of unknown and possibly anomalous flora. Various knight statues were also found, with one of them being depicted as holding the ceiling of the cavern. Further down the tunnel, a structure similar to the one found upon initial discovery, was found deeper in the tunnel. Unlike the previous “shrine”, this one seemed to have a gilded statue, with various artifacts around it. In front of the statue however, was a bowl, filled with what appeared to be water, inside of which was a shield of unknown origin, with an engraved red symbol on it.

Guarding the shrine were two demon-like entities. They entered defensive combat stances, wielding their shields and blades, until one of them noticed a christian cross necklace worn by one of the operatives present on scene. The entity slowly approached the operative, took the necklace into its hands to inspect it, upon which both entities holstered their weapons, gave the necklace back to the operative, returned to their positions, and kneeled. This suggests that the civilisation to which these artifacts belong to, are related to the christian religion to some degree.
