The first line of the second paragraph and the following paragraphs are written indented.

LITERATURE REVIEW (12 pt, Bold)

A literature review represents previous research on the research topic being discussed and also the theoretical core of an article. The purpose of a literature review is to "re-view" at what other researchers have done on a particular topic. The literature review is a means to an end, namely to provide background and serve as motivation for the objectives and hypotheses that guide one's research. A good literature review not only provides a summary of relevant previous research; researchers are also expected to critically evaluate, reorganize, and synthesize the work of others. The literature review should identify knowledge gaps identified by the author during the literature review and develop a theoretical explanation that addresses the research questions and objectives.

METHODS (12 pt, Bold)

The minimum research method consists of research type, type and source of data, data collection techniques, and data analysis techniques. The first line of the second paragraph and the following paragraphs are written indented.

RESULT & DISCUSSION (12 pt, Bold)

The discussion is divided into sub-categories based on elements/components/variables in the analytical framework. In this part, the author can also add a separate section to discuss additional things that are not included in the previous categories. In this section, the author should clearly state the answer and the position to the research question. The first line of the second paragraph and the following paragraphs are written indented.
