DIWALI

A most beautiful time of year is approaching. Each autumn, stunning firework displays, brilliant rows of lamps, and gleaming electric lights, light up the nights of Diwali, the holiday known as the “Festival of Lights.”

Homes, business, and public spaces are decoratively lit for this five-day celebration.

Diwali is India’s biggest and brightest national holiday. It is also celebrated by Hindus, Jains, Buddhists, and Sikhs in Nepal, Bangladesh, Malaysia, Singapore, and other countries.

The holiday coincides with the new moon of the Hindu New Year. This year, Diwali takes place from October 17-21.

Diwali, also called Dipawali, or Deepavali, gets its name from the “aval” or gleaming rows of “diyas” or clay lamps that are traditionally lit outside of homes.

The most widely-accepted history of Diwali tells the 15th century BC story of Lord Rama and his wife Sita who finally defeat the demon king Ravanna after 14 years of exile and return to their kingdom. The epic battle symbolizes the victory of good over evil, a major theme of the holiday.

As the legend goes, when Lord Rama returned to his homeland, the entire city was lit with thousands of oil lamps and decorated with beautiful “rangolis” - exquisite designs made of colored rice, powder, sand or flour. Replicas of these gorgeous decorations are displayed during modern day Diwali celebrations.

Today, contemporary artists display modern light art in celebration of Diwali. Captured in photos that we can admire long after Diwali is over, these light sculptures are fascinating interpretations of the beauty of light.

Diwali is also a celebration of the last harvest before winter. In the ancient Indian agricultural society, people would seek the divine blessing of Lakshmi, the goddess of wealth, as they completed their harvest and prayed for success in the new year. Today, homes radiant with diyas are meant to welcome Lakshmi and her blessings.

On the first day of Diwali, known as “Dhanteras,” families clean and prepare their homes and businesses. The second day, known as “Choti Diwali,” is the time to decorate houses with diyas and rangolis. Rangolis are usually created on the floor of the entrance to the home, and may include colorful flower petals.

The third day of Diwali is when the Lakshmi Puja, a demonstration of worship to the goddess Lakshmi and the central ritual of the holiday, occurs. When the Lakshmi Puja is over, beautiful fireworks are set off to symbolize the joy of Rama's return.

The fourth day of Diwali, known as “Govardhan Puja,” is the first day of the new financial year.

The fifth day, known as “Bhai Dooj,” is when the “Bhaiyadood,” or Feast of Brothers, is observed. Sisters invite their brothers to a meal where delicious food and traditional sweets are prepared.
