"In short, by rejecting the agreement that has just been signed, Canada would significantly weaken its competitive position in investment. And, whoever says investments, says jobs. We can criticize the agreement, think that it goes too far, or that it does not go far enough. One fact remains: Canada simply cannot afford to withdraw unless partisan blindness prevails over common sense."

The language law adopted by the Parti Québécois on August 26, 1977, commonly known as Bill 101, is a true charter of the French language. Among the boldest and most criticized provisions are the following: [...] Commercial and public signage must be in French only. [...] Only children of the English-speaking minority will have access to English schools.

"To put it bluntly, [this movement] is critical of state interventionism and of the welfare state. Their analysis is based on the idea that the Great Depression of the 1930s was not caused by capitalism but instead by early interventions of the state that perverted the mechanisms of the market economy [...]. This doctrine holds that a planned, state-dominated society inevitably runs aground, both politically and economically. "
