

Vagabond Starlight

Welcome to the somewhat ignoble resting place of Vagabond Starlight. There used to be a proper website here, but due to whimsy of circumstance, we now find ourselves on a Google Doc with a couple Drive links to PDFs. Such are of the vicissitudes of fate.

Shadlyn and I have always loosely organized Vagabond Starlight's planned storylines into a trio of books. Book 1 is actually complete, and is comprised of the first seven chapters of webcomic. Book 2, alas, not so much, though it does contain everything from chapter eight on that made it to the original website. Book 2 also contains all the "specials" strips; stuff like the Halloween strips and vacation placeholders.

Below are links to a sort of "rough draft" of these books. It's all very barebones in presentation. There's no cover, no chapter pages, some blank spaces, and so on. Someday I would very much like to make them a bit more presentable, but honestly right now I would just really like to have them readable.

Book 1: Ceres (PDF, 67 mb)

Book 2: Mars (PDF, 29 mb)

And if it just so happen that you really prefer the old comic strip version, you can still get that as one zip file. The images are the original web resolution, so they're a bit smaller, and rather than one convenient PDF, it's nearly 700 separate PNG files. But if that's your scene, here's a link!

ZIP file version (ZIP, 45 mb)

Chapter 10, alas, was never completed, but that didn't stop me from doing the scripting and mockups for the rest of the chapter. If you really wanted to know how chapter 10 was supposed to end, here's the extremely rough version. Beware typos, misdirected speech balloons, and ambiguous backgrounds abounds: Chapter 10 ending

As ever, any updates about the comic will be posted on my Twitter account (I'm @fox_barrett over there), but I would still like to stress that I see this comic as done and dusted. It's bittersweet to see the comic like this, but I figure it beats the alternative, what with the alternative being oblivion.

Thanks for stopping by. Take care of yourselves!

--Fox Barrett