Nurture Principle 6: Transitions are important in children's lives	Discussion Points/ Feedback	Agreed Next Steps
Environment and Relationships
Features of effective practice
There are clear routines visible in the playroom for example, welcome, check ins, review of activities.
Staff consult with children when there are changes to the routine, for example, "We are going to have a visitor to our playroom today later – are you all happy with that?"
There are clear plans for the day in the playroom which helps children to know what is coming up.
Learning and Teaching
Transitions throughout the day are well managed, for example, children are given clear warning and opportunities to get ready to move on.
