The text is for number 5 to 7.

Snakes don't see or hear as well as other animals. A snake has eyes but no eyelids. They have clear scales over their eyes. Most snakes can see movement, but some snakes are blind. Snakes have a great sense smell. A snake flicks out its forked tongue to collect scents. It doesn't mean the snake is hungry. The snake pulls its tongue in and sticks the forked tip into a place in the roof of its mouth called Jacobson's organ. This way of smelling lets snake finds other snakes as well as prey (animals it hunts for food).
