A stranded man was helped by an old dwarf. His skin is covered in scars and blemishes. Metallic plates and wires are conjoined with his body. His animal-like snout has cut into half. The man can only speak through a voice box glued to his neck. Worse of all, he cannot recall any memories of what had befallen him. Out of pity and loneliness, the dwarf took the man in. "Cervin" the dwarf calls the man. The dwarf nursed Cervin to health, taught him how to smith, and worked with him in his smithing workshop.

Dwarf's smithing business grew thanks to the help of Cervin. Adventurers would go all the way to this small village to have their hands on the dwarf's forged steel. Also their eyes on Cervin, as a form of 'tourist attraction'. Nevertheless, it helped the village economy for decades.

Generation shifted, as well as ideals. As the dwarf had passed away, the locals are ostracizing him. Nowhere else to go home to, he left the small village. He was content with everything up until this point. "What now? Who am i? What should I do?" He asks himself constantly.

6. Trivia

- The original design was made impulsively in December 2024 for an RPG OCsona collab project on Facebook (link will be included soon).
- The visual design took inspiration from Frankenstein, Freddy Krueger, and Deadpool.
- Despite being squeamish and having trypophobia, I managed to tough it up and actually felt satisfied with the flesh details (I felt nauseous afterwards).
- Fear of discrimination (and being mistaken for a monster), he decided to wear outfits that cover his whole body. He keeps his condition a secret.
- He is unable to physically breathe, sleep, eat, drink, talk, nor excrete. Although he can hear, see, and talk through a voice box.

- The way his body works is that as long as the main skeleton is intact or can be repaired/connected again, the flesh will slowly grow around the skeleton.
- He smells unpleasant.
- Contrary to the rumors about him, he actually has emotions. Just unable to express it physically (cannot shed tears, laugh, etc.(the laughing doodle was drawn with tears for humor purpose)).
