Literature Review (Opsional)

A literature review serves as a comprehensive analysis and synthesis of existing scholarly literature on a particular topic or research question, playing a vital role in academic writing. It enables researchers to contextualize their work within the broader body of knowledge, identifying gaps, controversies, and areas requiring further exploration. By examining previous studies, researchers can discern recurring themes, methodologies, and theoretical frameworks prevalent in their field, thereby understanding the current state of knowledge. Additionally, evaluating the methodologies and findings of past research allows for a critical assessment of their strengths and weaknesses, aiding in the development of robust research designs. Moreover, referencing previous studies lends credibility to one's argument or research hypothesis, demonstrating a foundation in established scholarship. Furthermore, a literature review aids in identifying key scholars and seminal works that have shaped the discourse, thereby enhancing the author's credibility and authority. To conduct a literature review effectively, researchers must define the scope of their review, search for relevant sources, evaluate their credibility and relevance, organize the literature thematically or chronologically, synthesize and analyze the findings, and appropriately cite all sources. Ultimately, a well-executed literature review not only contributes to the advancement of knowledge but also strengthens the rigor and validity of the researcher's own work.

RESEARCH METHODS

The contents of the method are written with the Avenir Next LT Pro 11 font (1.5 spaces). The method is a technique of collecting, processing and analyzing data. The contents of the method include data sources, time of data collection, population and sample, data presentation, and data analysis techniques. This method determines the sharpness of the results of data analysis in the results section and research discussion. The contents of this method are arranged in paragraph form, no more than three paragraphs.

RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

The contents of the Findings and Discussion are written in the Avenir Next LT Pro 11 font (1.5 spaces). Results are research findings that are presented as they are without the author's opinion. Results are not raw data, but data that has been processed and interpreted in the form of statistical data, whether in the form of tables, graphs, charts, sketches, or photographs combined with relevant theories. While the discussion is the author's argument about the research findings and their relevance to previous research. the discussion is the result of data analysis based on relevant theory. The contents of the results and discussion must answer the research problem and find the right analysis for the solution / have a positive impact on the development of science and technology in society.
