

Laser Gingival Recontour for Uneven Gums

Even bright, white teeth can be visually unappealing if the surrounding gum tissues are uneven or have receded. Also known as tissue sculpting or gum reshaping, laser gingival recontouring is a simple procedure that can correct excessively low, high or uneven gums. This treatment makes it possible to create smooth, even gum lines and smiles that patients are proud to show off.

Gums that naturally cover a large portion of the teeth can make the tooth structures look too small for the mouth. This is usually the result of a chronic health issue, prolonged use of prescription medications or genetics.

Conversely, when the gums are too high, the teeth can look unnaturally long. This is the result of the gum recession. During gum recession, the gum tissues start to draw back from the teeth. Recession exposes the sensitive, underlying dentin and even a small portion of the tooth root.

In addition to diminishing the aesthetic appeal of the smile, gum recession can lead to a host of oral health issues by increasing the likelihood of decay. It's important to note that receding gums can also be an indicator of periodontal disease. This is a degenerative disease that leads to the deterioration of both the soft tissues that surround the teeth and the underlying bone structures.
