

THE NEW DEAL

New Democrats, New Atlantic?

By Christopher Ponser

Senator up for re-election, Gunnz011 (STAFF PHOTO)

NEW YORK, ATLANTIC — Recently, the Greens merged into the Democratic Party. This has resulted in many new Democrats and has presented a huge chance for the Democratic Party to move more left and be more in touch with their more leftist allies. This has created a new faction of the pre-existing already leftist Democrats and the new Greens into a New Democrats ideology. Atlantic has, for a very long time, been known as a red state. Some political analysts believe that the new cooperation between the New Democrats and Old Democrats will be able to finally turn Atlantic blue.

Who all exactly plans to run for Atlantic Senate these midterms is uncertain, but there is much speculation. Many of the Democrats who were unable to win a house seat in the last election are all contenders, such as PGF3 or b_fox2, but the most plausible candidate isn't either of those - but the person who didn't get to unseat NAM_6g_Reenactor's in the senate race. The most plausible person that will run is PhlebotinumEddie. Since they didn't get elected, they still have plenty of options ahead of them in the future. This is discounting the possibility of them going for Atlantic Governor or Lieutenant Governor, which is entirely plausible, as no press has come from them announcing any of their future intentions, so we can only speculate.

A former Green, PhlebotinumEddie has many policies that have been described as generally the center. A Green that supports legalizing Marijuana, raising minimum wage, and expanding national parks, with the support of the Democratic Party they might have a strong base to build a challenging campaign for the incumbent Senator Gunnz, should he decide to run again. Perhaps in many future elections, the unified Democrats and Greens will be able to provide a strong opponent capable of upsetting the Republican incumbents, not just in Atlantic, but in all of the states.