

Frozen hearted Alika backstory

As the brushing storm of snow began to pile up in the forest of lakewoods, A strange creature slowly walked through it. Feeling its fur be blown around by the wind and the coldness that settled in by the freezing snow that poured down, The being or well creature was revealed to be a young adult Sochuri. It was very weakened and slow, Holding what seemed to be another creature in its mouth. Though it seemed extremely young and small, it couldn't be a baby or young sochuri. As it slowly walked through the thick snow that covered its claws it came to a halt, Shivering from the cold. It looked at the full moon that let down its ever so dim light. Facing away and back down to the snow the creature's legs finally gave into the frost bite, weakening his balance and causing him to collapse.

The freezing cold was only getting worse as the blizzard that rushed through the woods got rougher. The adult Sochuri, Freezing from the cold, looked up at the small creature who layed in the thick snow. Shivering as the snow slowly piles on it. Before it fully covered the smaller creature, The Sochuri used its wings to knock the snow off and bring the creature to them. Letting the smaller one lay on the Sochuris bottom wing while the other wing covered them from above.

The Sochuri tried its best to keep the young one warm for as long as possible, Though he knew he couldn't do this for much longer. His fire already died out though there are a few that still remain. With the last of his energy he brought his tail up and under his wing, Breathing a bit of fire onto its tail and lighting it up.

{Author note: This isn't canon to creatures of sonaria. I'm honestly unsure if the Sochuri species in the actual game can light their tail on fire. Though for the sake of this backstory it will be implemented}

The fire on its tail isn't able to spread to anywhere else on the body, It also doesn't seem to hurt the Sochuri either. As he hid his head under his wing he glanced at the little one who seemed to be getting a bit more warm from the fire, Though of course, The fire was only strong enough to keep the little one warm. Not the Sochuri though he seemed fine with that. Smiling ever so slightly, He rests his head on the bottom wing. Shutting his eyes for the final, As the snow piled onto the adult Sochuri. The fire on its tail began to die out more quickly.

Though before it did there was a slight noise, The sound of walking coming closer and closer every so often. Though it soon came to a stop, A claw that is similar to the Sochuris claw went under the top wing and lifted it up. The snow that was piled on the wing fell off and back onto the ground, The cold rush of wind began to settle in once again.

Upon fully flipping the wing over, Another Sochuri was seen, It was a female Sochuri. Though it was much lighter colored than the one that was protecting the smaller creature from the snow. It tilted its head to the left as it looked down at the small creature.

Glancing over at the adult Sochuri it gently nudges its head. Though it did not seem to get any sort of response back, The Sochuri seemed saddened at this action before looking back down and gazing its eyes upon the small creature. Gently with careful grip, It snatched up the small one with its teeth, making sure it doesn't penetrate their soft and fragile skin. The Sochuri glances once more at the fallen creature before opening her wings and flying off.

As she left the adult Sochuri in the snow, The Sochuri smiled as the snow piles on top of it. Fully covering it and making this spot their final resting place. Lakewoods...

As the Female Sochuri makes her way back home, she opens the door and walks inside. Laying the little creature down near the fireplace before going back to the door and closing it, While she was doing that. Her son, Shinsou, came downstairs upon hearing the door open and close. As he rushed down he quickly stopped himself before he could trip over the small creature. Growling slightly at it before backing away as it weakly opened its eyes, It seemed to be a bit blurry for a few seconds. Though he quickly regained his vision.

Turning its head to the baby Sochuri it seemed to be more confused than scared, The little Sochuri noticed that the other creature seemed to have no reaction to his attempt to be scary or menacingly. He seemed to be curious, Though before he could get close to the little creature. His mother came back to the fireplace and sat near the little creature. Wrapping her wings over the little one and pulling them closer to her, She glanced at her other child before opening her wings once again. As she gently smiled at her actual baby, He was hesitant at first but still slowly approached his mother and the small creature.

The Sochuri soon moved a bit closer to the other creature before laying down. The other creature didn't seem to mind and scotched a bit near it. As the two rested near each other the mother of the fawn smiled down at the two. Laying down with them and using her wings to cover them, the three laid there until the blizzard would come to a stop.