

#FirstSevenJobs

In August 2016, a hashtag emerged on Twitter inquiring about the first seven jobs different people held; some famous people even joined in on the question. It's a question that gets directly at the heart of the topic of work histories- what have different people done along the way to get them where they are today?

As we've learned, work histories can say a lot about someone, but they are only part of the story. Take some time to do some searching on Twitter to read the different responses people have had to the #firstsevenjobs (see also #first7jobs) question. Fill in three examples below (and make ONE of them someone famous!). Put the username for each example in the box at the top of the column. For "impression" explain the message that work history is sending or the impression you get of that person based on the tweet.

	Example: Mrs. O'Connor (@oconnorsrb)	User 1:	User 2:	Famous User:
Job 1	babysitter
Job 2	camp counselor
Job 3	umpire
Job 4	park district front desk
Job 5	JCPenney
Job 6	Limited Too
Job 7	waitress
Impression	Either started working really young, or still trying to figure out what she wants to do.

Now that you have looked at sample work histories in class and real-life work histories on Twitter, explain what you have learned about work histories.

#FirstSevenJobs

And finally- what would YOUR tweet look like? You probably haven't had seven jobs yet, but you've had some! And what would you like the full list to look like? List the jobs you've had and then determine what other jobs you will need in order to reach your final career goals. Fill in the chart below with the list that would be in your tweet- and make the font RED for jobs you haven't had yet.

My #firstsevenjobs
1.
2.
3.
4.
5.
6.
7.