Dear Sally,

Last holiday, my friends and I visited Ponorogo in East Java. Ponorogo is a small city, but it is very natural and beautiful. We spent the night at a villa in Jetis. On the first day, we visited Prigi southern beach. We watched the amazing views of the sea and the white waves. We grilled fish and had "Nasi Pecel" for lunch. On the second day, we visited "Dongko" mountain resort. There were a lot of plants, especially clove trees. We camped there for a night. Although brought up in the traditional Javanese cultural world, Soekarno was educated in modern Dutch colonial schools. In 1921, he entered Bandung Institute of Technology to study architecture, graduated in 1926. Soekarno had been increasingly involved in nationalist politics since his teens, when he had boarded in the house of H. O. S. Tjokroaminoto, a leading nationalist politician. It was in Bandung that he decided his future lay in politics, not architecture.

Event 2 ==> On August 17, 1945, immediately following Japan's surrender to the Allies, Soekarno and fellow nationalist Muhammad Hatta declared Indonesia's independence. The next day, the provisional parliament adopted a constitution and elected Soekarno as a president. The constitution included the Pancasila in its preamble and gave the president a great deal of authority. The Dutch refused to accept the independence proclamation. For the next five years, Indonesia and The Netherlands negotiated and argued with one another. Finally, in December 1949 the Dutch acknowledged Indonesia's independence, but the status of the western half of New Guinea (now the province of Papua) remained in dispute.
