KYLO REN

Kylo Ren is the persona taken on by the once prodigy jedi, Ben Solo, after learning the secrets of his heritage, leading up to the events that caused him to turn his back on the Jedi Academy and his previous Master. Partially due to the fact that Anakin Skywalker had been publicly outed as Darth Vader as a political stunt, Kylo made sure not to make any note of any relations. The news had caused a near break in him as to who he was, who was supposed to be, why he was and felt the way he felt, why his family treated him the way they did. Those who knew Darth Vader, or knew of him when he was younger would know, he doesn't keep it a secret per say, but it is not something he talks about or mentions his blood relation, despite looking up to Darth Vader, just as he looked up to Anakin Skywalker as a child.

He was a prodigy, an incredibly powerful force user, yet by his early 20s, when his uncle and grandfather would have already had their major life-changing events... he hadn't really done anything. He had so much power and didn't know, no he had nothing really to do with it. There was no great evil or overbearing force he would be able to set out and save the people from like every generation before him had.

Kylo Ren didn't fit in with the light, and it feels like he may not fit in with the dark either... As Supreme Leader, Kylo isn't one to be influential. He simply makes his decisions and holds his stance with brute force and strength. He's aware, at this point, that the First Order is not in the best state during this... transition.

Honestly if it were to continue the way it is, under his sole leadership and control, it seems as though The First Order may not last that way. He is far too stubborn to openly admit such that he may be out of his depth or would need help from someone who can deal with handling people far better than he can.

He finds it dreadfully boring and annoying having to run the First Order now that he's usurped the title of Supreme Leader. It wasn't at all as he expected and wanted, and it feels more of his time is spent doing technical things, managing people and approving what's going on or what they do. He didn't have the same open availability to go off and braze a planet, to have something to fall back on, someone to keep him busy and send him somewhere. Instead of using his strength and power he was being forced to deal with things he deemed unimportant, and started to neglect.

The Knights of Ren were one thing. A small elite group, who all already know who and what they are, what they must do. They really don't need guidance or leadership the same way The First Order does.

Kylo Ren is generally a hostile force, unless they are known to be fairly powerful, have something that would make them a potential useful ally, or have a good reason for him not to attack, though now that he appears to be in the field less, he seems to be more prone to attacking or instigating something. Or if he knows there is no threat to be had, though usually he has his guard up.

He is known and feared for his strength and powers, more specifically how unpredictable he can be due how quick his temper and actions about something can change on a whim.

BEN SOLO

Originally Ben Solo, he grew up as the son of Leia Organa and Han Solo. His entire life he had been in a mental turmoil with himself. He was born neutral in the force, never knowing what that was or means, causing him to never know or be able to feel his true place. His family, his name, his legacy, he came from Legendary, Resistance fighters, Force wielders, people who are believed to only be myth.

For as long as he could remember, his parents never seemed to have time for him, mother too busy as Senator, his Father too busy to stay around as well. He was left on his own, with simple droids to care for him. Even the attempt on his life by one of the nanny droids, nearly killing him as a toddler during a tantrum, seemed to change their mind about who should be looking after and caring for the boy.

His temper never seemed to cease, causing issues for Leia as Senator at a young age, and seeming to be too much of a ruckus to easily keep a handle on. So by the time Ben Solo was 10 years old, having grown up listening to the stories of them defeating The Empire and training as Jedi the stories and victories, losses his parents and their friends had faced, was finally sent to start his own Jedi Training, becoming Padawan of Luke Skywalker at his Jedi Academy. Around this time, as he started harnessing the power of the force, and finding how to feel it, he had started hearing a pull, a call towards the dark side, something inside of him that felt it just wasn't right, he didn't fit. A voice, ensuring him there was a reason for it. That he was meant for something. That he was being led astray, lied to.

In the first year he joined the academy he had enough strength and potential to easily become Luke's star pupil, but to the displeasure of other Padawans.

Despite training and the push on positive influence in Ben's life, it never got easier or felt like he belonged, that this was who he was, Ben Solo, he'd even been given someone else's name..

So, when he was 14, while he was on a mission, he had come across a group known as the Knights of Ren, Powerful users of the force who used it to cause havoc and destruction. Their leader could easily feel the strength of the darkness inside of him, and invited the young Jedi to join their ranks, to which Ben had denied, though it was known the invitation was left open if one day he so changed his mind.

During all this time, with his conflictions, the insistence on the light, yet whispering pulla of the darkness, pulling him in opposite directions, he had no clue why he felt this way, the reason.

What purpose would he have to feel and think these things?

Unfortunately, it had been kept a close knit secret, Darth Vader's true identity, That he had previously gone by the name Anakin Skywalker. It hadn't been until he was nearly 23 that the news would have reached him. Not even by his own family, or those who knew him, but as part of some political scheme the news was released to the public, being the only reason the man even found out about this secret, sending him into a spiral about his identity and his family. It felt like he was justified, his conflicts, his discontent with the way he needed to learn and use his power, the stories and lies, the omission from him... Because what, they were scared of him? Even more so now that he had spiral deeper, tempted by the darkness after learning the truth of his Grandfather he had looked up to so dearly.

It wouldn't have been more than a year later that he had left the Jedi Academy, realizing his uncle had intended to try to kill him, feeling even further excluded and betrayed at the actions. After the events that lead to him leaving and the temple being destroyed, Ben sought out the Knights of Ren, killing their current leader and taking on the Title of Ren, giving himself the name Kylo Ren, and becoming Master of the Knights of Ren, before leading them to The First Order.
