Perception is The Key

Your law firm must have brand recognition to be considered the authority and trustworthy.

Your practice has to be the firm above the others that can solve the searchers legal problem.

Our research shows that most legal practices do a partial or poorly executed job with search engine optimization.

Along with this often comes poor website coding or inaccurate formatting, telling Google they are the lesser choice to be deemed the authority, equating directly to their ranking. This gives your law firm the opportunity to prove its on target with proper meta data and relevant content.

Does Your Law Firm Have The Right Process For Results?

Google looks for freshness of content as well as the quality of hyperlinks pointing to the website.

Many firms have broken hyperlinks which lead to error pages. This tells Google not just that there is questionable authority lowering their ranking (page positions), but also that their practice has poor maintenance and may not care as much as their competition does about their clients.

With well maintained websites having continual flow of fresh content and positive reviews, your firm can overtake other law firms seeking higher Google rankings even if they have longer years online.

Google levels the playing field and enabling smaller firms to be perceived as the better practice and become “deemed” as the practice to “win” higher positioning in the results pages.
