

Counting
By Raj Kaur

This body's an education in subtraction, zero circling empty like a stomach or a grave.

Hope's just arithmetic and BMI's simple enough. I see her and I am eating my heart out, 650 calories but can my mother's thighs be mathed?

Arms of my grandmother, unknown variable.
All I know is they sewed her children's clothes, left room to grow, so now her fingers reach into my mouth for what's rotten—

a wound turned gift under my pillow, she says,
"Count sheep, then blessings."
As many as it takes to be full.
