When I say I feel like a one moth studio this is what I mean. I don't want to come off like I'm complaining or anything because I love learning, getting better at using AE, finding new animation tricks and cheats! But there's no beating around the bush, animating is time consuming. Going into this project I thought it would have taken me maybe 40 hrs to complete, but as I got closer to broaching 35 hrs I realized there was still A LOT left to do for this animation that was not even 30s worth!

Anyways once I get my frames done, I throw them into AE which doesn't take long to make everything look pretty. Then I'll stitch everything together in premiere, and go hunt for sfx that are copyright free (of course I used tokyo drift which is not copyright free, but it seems the golden rule is no more than 10-30sec. Idk what the stance is on using meme sfx nor who to give credit? Since everyone uses them they feel very public domain. Does that make it right? Probably not ^ ^;)

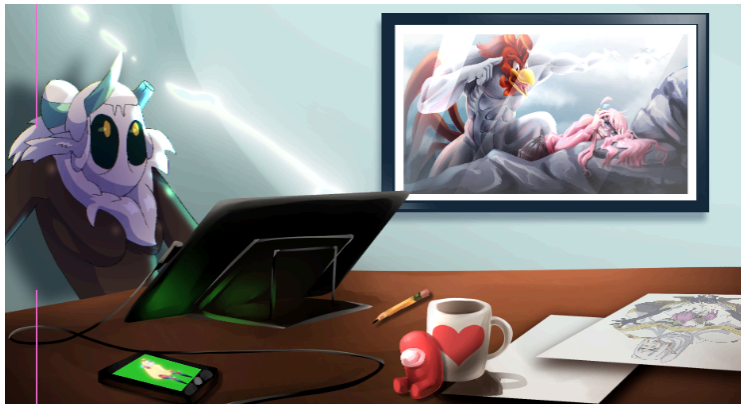

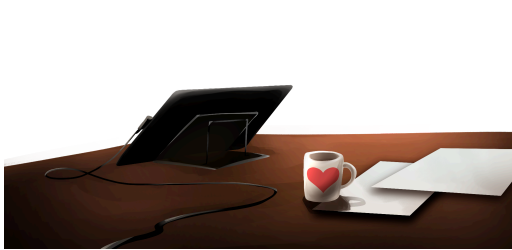

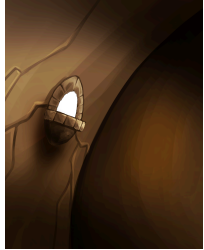

Enough rambling! I wanted to share how long it took to make this goofy animation, to any animators reading this I'd love to know how long you guys take to animate. I feel like I take an absurd amount of time when I animate.

THESE ARE NOT ACCURATE! JUST ROUGH ESTIMATES FOR EACH PART
since i don't want to math any more.
I wanted to time myself and see how long each part took. It's crazy that everything else was done practically under half as much time as the animation part. I shouldn't be surprised but holy hell
