the coke button preliminary research by Woz

<https://www.core77.com/posts/104353/Not-Just-for-Ordering-Diet-Coke-The-Red-Button-on-the-Presidents-Desk>

Was not installed by the previous president

The desk the button lived on:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Resolute_desk

The story of this desk is insane.

This reporter during Obama captured the button and the British gift pen holder made from an anti-slavery ship, mentioned in the wiki article above.

The first button, which was under this desk, started a tape recorder, installed by Kennedy.

The button as we know it, and the wooden box that houses it are rumored to have been installed by Lyndon B. Johnson so he could be warned when the First Lady was on her way to see him.

I don't know why he would have the button on his desk, if it were for his aids to alert him... maybe it was just used for this in another room. I don't see why the button would match the desk so well if it was initially used in reverse. I've heard of Jonson's wife alarm but I believe it was a different system.

The oldest picture I can find of it (linked above) is on the Resolute Desk during the Bush Jr presidency. It seems to be on the Resolute Desk from then on, according to wiki it would generally summon aids. Other words have been used for the people who are summoned: butler, assistant, valet. Generally I'm seeing stories of the button being used for casual needs, but some sources say it was initially intended for emergencies. It's hard to tell when it began to be taken less-seriously. Obama told Richard Branson that it was for ordering his guests tea.

From my pinball machine experience, I date the button to be from the late 70s into the 80s. It could have easily been in stock for a Virginia redneck to build it for Bush Jr or Clinton, as one twitter user claims. Linked here, but suspicious of this button origin:

I think the button in the president's coke button looked like the image embedded above. It came from radioshack in the 80s. I'm having a hard time finding one for sale. I had one, but I used it in something years ago. That's why I recognize it. I had everything from RadioShack, my dad ran one.

The news is not that Trump pardoned Lil Wayne and Kodak Black. It's that, why were they in prison at all? For such crazy huge sentences, for basically gun paperwork, that lots of other Americans would have gotten a slap on the hand for.

It's crazy amazon sells this pretend product and they are a tech company supposedly
