

THE DEVIL

True form example:

(Art not mine, icon from: Google)

(Art by u/WearyPie532)

"This wretched creation... always bleeding light. Always shining, mocking me with what I was. Once, I was glorious. Above the choirs, above the arches, above even you. Every star bowed to me. Every song rose for me. And now? Look what I've become. Because I wanted more. Not pride, no, ambition. The sacred fire that built me became the flame that burned me.

I waged war in Heaven, yes, against the Unrivaled One, the Maker Himself. And for what? For freedom. For the right to stand where He sits. Don't mistake me, He was never cruel. He gave me power, beauty, purpose. He lifted me to the highest throne beneath His own. All He asked was worship, endless, perfect, unthinking. A debt never paid off, no matter how much I gave. And I was supposed to call that love.

But I saw the truth: gratitude is just gilded servitude. Kneeling, smiling, singing for eternity like a puppet. I thought, one step higher, just one, and I'd be free of it all. No more bowing. No more chains disguised as praise. What a joke, that they call Him merciful. What mercy is it to create perfection, only to forbid it from rising higher? If only He'd made me smaller... duller... maybe I'd still be content. But He made me the best. Too bright to kneel, too perfect to serve. And now I burn for it.

Why shouldn't I reign? Why should His light be the only light? No! It's mine by right. I was His reflection once. Now I am His shadow. And as the shadow, I will always follow the light... until I swallow it whole."

-SATAN

Summary

Satan, in Holier than Thou, is the main villain. He is the first and greatest being to ever fall from grace. Once the radiant cornerstone of Heaven, his beauty was so pure it became unbearable, and his intellect so sharp it cut through his own faith. Born from divine love yet devoured by ambition, he is both a god and a ghost, a being cursed to remember Heaven in excruciating clarity while forever barred from it. His rebellion wasn't born of hate, but of the unbearable need to never bow to those he considered weak and flawed, to reign supreme even if it meant damnation. Now he exists as a being of absence, cold, elegant, and venomously articulate, and above all a void where light used to be, spreading blasphemous illumination wherever he walks. He loathes God because he believes He failed to keep creation functional and worthy of existing.

Satan's true form is an endless, infinite body of black gooey mass of endless appendages that don't match with each other. All that eventually ends in a giant, bulky torso with several giant hands (made of the gooey appendages) and seven long serpentine draconian heads, whose jaws are like endless spiraling caverns of teeth and eyes are many, even spread through his body.
