What Types Of Pests Are Common In Budd Lake?

Budd Lake is a great community in Morris County NJ and within Mount Olive township. It contains a wonderful diner where you can enjoy a delicious omelet at any time of day and Turkey Brook Park, which features seven soccer fields, a 1.5 acre dog park, and more! However, just like anywhere else, it can be home to a variety of pests.

Insects are an important part of the forest ecosystem. They cull weak and inferior trees, recycle organic materials on the forest floor, and provide food for birds and other animals. When insect populations get out of control, they can cause severe damage and kill or disfigure trees.

Many forest insect pests target seedlings or the young succulent tissues of small twigs, shoots and buds. The recent unimpeded spread of hemlock woolly adelgid (HWA; Adelges tsugae) throughout the northeastern US has resulted in unprecedented levels of tree mortality and has raised concerns about the economic viability of Christmas tree orchards.

Piercing/sucking insects are among the most destructive forest pests. They feed on a wide range of plant species but are most commonly associated with fruit orchards and landscape trees, where they damage leaves and fruits, and degrade tree health and growth.

Cockroaches carry a wide variety of disease organisms on their bodies, and deposit these organisms on food and food preparation utensils as they forage. These organisms can cause a number of diseases including diarrhea, dysentery and cholera. In addition, cockroaches can produce odorous secretions from various points on their bodies that affect the flavor of foods and can trigger allergic responses in some individuals.

Stink bugs are voracious feeders that consume a broad range of fruits, seeds and flowers produced by plants. They are named for the foul odor they emit when threatened or crushed. Stink bug infestations in homes and structures can be difficult to manage because of their resilience, large numbers and overwintering habits.

Treatments of the interior and exterior walls of homes and other buildings in the spring, summer and fall can significantly reduce stink bug population numbers and prevent them from entering. In addition, three exterior chemical applications in late August and early September can typically reduce stink bug populations by 90-100%. The success of these treatments depends on the timing and intensity of application, so it is important to seek professional help from an experienced pest management company. These experts have a deep understanding of the pest activity and ecology specific to the greater Morris County area, including Budd Lake. They will be able to develop an effective strategy that will help you get rid of pests in your backyard and keep them away for good.
