

The Future Of The Revolution

Truly, fate has been kind to our movement. Starting off with little more than a few wide eyed dreamers, the Socialist Party is now a powerful third party within the United States, a feat once thought impossible by the revolutionaries of old. Of course, our movement, revolutionary though it is, still does not have the same power or pull as the two major parties, the Democratic Party, and the Republican Party. This has prompted me to ask, why? Why is the system working like this? Well, my comrades, as you know the system is rigged. It has always been rigged, from the day Eugene V. Debs was arrested, to the day our movement first entered the halls of power, the establishment has tried to keep us down. So, that prompts the question, how do we move forward? How do we continue to grow our movement? Well, we have a few strategies. We rely on the strength of the people, as all movements do, so of course we need to spread our message. As such, I believe it would be pertinent for us to try and listen ever closer to what our constituents ask for, as we are a party of, for, and by the people. We must also allow ourselves to diversify our movement, allowing new, different modes of thought into our party, as well as trying to attract those socialists of a different nature. We are all united in our shared goals, let no petty differences divide us! Lastly, we must begin to speak up for the rights of the smallest groups in society, even more so then we already do. Expect further items to be written on this topic, but for now, I bid you adieu.
