„Isn't it kind of wierd, what war can take from you? How it can simply destroy everything and everyone, you love. All it takes, is a small impulse to raise hell.

And once it's gone, once your beloved home burns in flames, once someone, you love is dead, you cannot bring him back, you cannot rebuild it. It's lost, forever. War ruled my life and took almost everything from me. All is lost, forever and ever.

But still, even though both sides had to go through suffering, though on both sides ponys are dying, beloved ones get taken, homes are burned and existences are deleted, they go on fighting.

They are fighting without mercy, even thought they have no reason to do so.

Nobody wants war, but it is always there.

It just happens. When you least expect it, it is there in one blink of an eye. And it brings the suffering, the crying and the harm.

But conflict lies in the nature of us all and is inevitable.

Power is worth achieving, but also brings many risks and is very dangerous. The spirit of an individual is unpredictable and so is conflict.

War is unpredictable.

It invades your healthy world and destroys it, takes it apart, piece by piece. It takes the ones, you love and annihilates them.

All this suffering, created by the ideological views of close minded individuals, through unjustified hatred and and faiths. All of this is no reason to start a war.

But it is still there, regardless. And faster, than you can think, you will stand in the darkness, alone and defenseless, waiting for better times, hoping to see a ray of hope at the horizon, but it never comes.

Instead you just get total and absolute darkness, brutal darkness, because that is everything, war is.

What I want to tell you?

Appreciate the ones, that are most beloved by you, never take them for granted. I know, that probably over a hundred people told this story to you, but they should. It is an important lesson, to be learned and you should never forget it.
