

If you're planning a trip to Australia, a visit to Uluru in the Red Center should definitely be on your itinerary! Uluru, also known as Ayers Rock, is a massive sandstone formation that is over half a billion years old and towers 348 meters high. It is a spiritually significant site for the Anangu Aboriginal people and is home to many rare plants and animals. The best time to visit Uluru is between May and September, when temperatures are cooler and the colors of the rock really come to life. Getting to Uluru from Alice Springs is easy either by rental car, guided tour, or bus. Once there, there are many activities to do such as hiking, taking a camel tour, and witnessing a beautiful sunrise or sunset. Just keep in mind that starting from October 2019, it will be illegal to climb Uluru, so make sure to respect the significance of this sacred site. So go ahead and add Uluru to your travel bucket list; it's sure to be a memorable experience! [\[1\]](#)[\[2\]](#)
