Do I need to call the police after every car accident?

It's always a good idea to involve the police after a car accident. Although some insurance providers may not require a police report to process a claim, having one can offer valuable documentation. Police reports often contain information about the parties involved and help identify who may be at fault, which can support your claim and make the process smoother.

Who is responsible for covering my medical expenses after an accident?

In New York, no-fault insurance benefits cover medical expenses for injuries caused by an accident. These benefits are paid by your insurance company and typically include up to $50,000 in medical bills, lost wages up to $2,000 per month, and travel expenses related to doctor visits. To receive these benefits, you must report the accident to your insurer within 30 days.

How much time do I have to file a lawsuit after an accident?

In New York, the general time limit to file a lawsuit for a car accident is three years from the date of the incident. However, different types of claims may have other deadlines depending on the details of the case. It's important to contact an attorney quickly to make sure your claim is filed on time and within the legal requirements.
