

Inner presence mood bored

By Henry Walton

Personality

- My character who I have named 'AJ' is moody. He doesn't really have much in terms of a personality. All he is set on and wants from life is to gain more drugs and to act hard and mean in front of his friends. The name 'AJ' is very plain and represents how this man doesn't have a lot to him. He is just another basic drug user who has nothing else going on in his life. No redemption awaits him. He has no further character development.
- He doesn't care about how bad the drugs he's been doing are or what they are doing to him personally, this is just his life. He doesn't tell 'Blister' as he knows he doesn't take drugs and he wouldn't understand it. But he does tell his other friend 'Bojang' who is also in the gang.

Personality

AJ is very aggressive and doesn't really find things as amusing as some of the others do. He will still laugh along with them but he is very different to them in a lot of ways.

He thinks he is better than everyone. Yet he won't show it, he knows compared to the rest of the group that he does a lot worse than them. He only really stays in the gang because he likes 'Blister' and respects him as they have been through a lot together.

Inner Thoughts

- AJ thoughts are very similar throughout the play and that is to intimidate everyone there. He doesn't really care about what the victims of 'Blister' are doing or going. He just wants to be feared and wants to act accordingly without caring about anything or anyone else.
- At the end of the day when 'Blister' throws his gang away for the night, AJ doesn't really care all that much. He has drugs to take and possibly other people to see.
