Week 03

A studio space for the exploration
of text and image working together

Thoughts on critique

"I firmly believe you can be a critic while being kind and open-hearted.

I don't even care if that sounds naive.

Most people think the number one goal of a critic is to judge whether work is good or bad.

They are wrong. #imo

The number one goal of a critic should be to make things better. That's it.

Criticism only succeeds when everyone wants things to be better. The moment you sniff out that a critic's goal is not to help you make things better, BOY BYE."

- Chappell Ellison in "How to Take Criticism"

What is the purpose of critique?

1. For a collective conversation to emerge
2. To ask the right questions to arrive at new answers
3. To exercise your imagination in picturing possibilities
4. To celebrate your work
5. To point towards progress and growth

What are the goals of today's critique?

1. To consider the effectiveness of communication
 - a. How effectively does this communication the instructions?
2. To consider the usage of image and text in relation to each other
 - a. What is the relationship of image and text?
3. To evaluate the techniques employed in service of intent
 - a. Who is the intended audience and what is the context and how are those considered in the execution?

How to give feedback

You should be:

- Honest
 - Growth comes from directness
- Fair
 - Pay equal amount of attention to everyone
- Kind
 - Give the crit you want to receive

Avoid:

- Meanness
 - No insults, no personal attacks
- Prescriptiveness
 - Try not to give direct directions as you envision it, without clarification
- Vagueness
 - Hone in on your senses

How to receive feedback

You should be:

- Open
 - Treat the feedback you receive as being real and true
- Attentive
 - Take notes, ask someone to take notes, or record the crit
- Specific
 - Ask questions you want the answers to

Avoid:

- Defensiveness
 - The easiest response is “thank you”
- Taking it personally
 - Your value is not tied to your work
- Accepting everything
 - Think everything over to decide what to act on and what not to act on

More thoughts on critique

“You’re also thinking here that success in a critique means that people like what you made, and that success in the next critique is showing how obedient you are in following their suggestions. You’re missing the point. It’s a gift exchange, not an oral exam, and if you don’t get past this in school, you will be condemned to repeat it after you leave. You’ll go to one client meeting and walk out mad that they didn’t like what you made, then you’ll grumpily make their suggestions real and bring them in for the next round, and get mad again when they still don’t like it. You will complain to your friends about “pushing pixels” and how dumb clients are. And you will be as good a designer at 32 as you were at 22, maybe slightly worse.”

Project 02: Comic

Tell a story from your life with interwoven historical or cultural research in the form of a comic. This will involve research, writing, drafting, designing, and editing.

- Approximately three “pages”
- Can be digital or print
- Imagery can be whatever you choose (illustration, drawing, photography, gifs, collage, etc.)
- Must include text somewhere
- You can use a story from a relative’s life

Due date: Monday, 18 October

Questions about Project 02: Comic?

Assignments for Week 04

1. Read “Making Comics” by Scott McCloud, Chapter 1 “Writing with Pictures” and Chapter 3 “The Power of Words” (PDF on MS Teams, also “Understanding Comics” if you’re interested)
2. Exercise 01:
 - a. Pick a favorite movie and roughly break down the story into just 16 key moments using only pictures, no words. Make sure they’re clear enough and connected enough that a friend who hasn’t seen the movie can tell what’s going on without any additional explanation. If you had to cut it down to 8 panels, could you? (Sketches are fine)
3. Exercise 02:
 - a. Choose a comic (either provided here or your own) and analyze one page, writing about the author’s choice of moment, choice of frame, choice of image, choice of word, and choice of flow
