Sug Trite 2024-5-first-network-su First Network Summit Concluded	We just completed the inaugural summit of the new international Contact Research Network* - thanks to the amazing colleagues who spent the last 2 days with us in London at Birkbeck! Our conversations highlighted some priorities and opportunities for future research Contact interventions can promote understanding in schools (Lindsey), at work (Libby) and in conflict situations (Orkun), and reduce political polarisation (Michèle). Contact in everyday life may also promote understanding, yet we need to further explore how to create successful interactions (Stefania, Deborah & Patrick). There are promising opportunities to use new technologies to	imageUrl https://drive. google.com/uc? export=downloa dkid=15Gs327W BROhsATHUG p8_K9RefR1KN 9d_O	webUrt		Author Lukas Wallrich	Category events	Show yes promote contact and better intergroup relations - from VR to chatbots (Lukas). We were particularly excited to also hear from early career researchers who will help shape the future of our research field (Jie, Zackary, Diana, Emine and Ditte). We struck up various new collaborations and can't wait to see them play out - and to have further contact researchers join us on the journey ahead.

		Location: Egham, UK Salary: £39,233 per annum - including London Allowance Post Type: Full Time	uk/images/logo- og-default.jpg	aspx?ref=0724- 223
		Deadline: 23.59 hours BST on Thursday 22 August 2024
		We are seeking to appoint ambitious research scientists with high-level skills in quantitative research methods and a background in social/political psychology or cognate areas. The posts are available from October 1st 2024, or as soon as possible thereafter. Each appointment is for three years, subject to a review after the first year.
		Successful applicants will join the scientific team for the "Secret Power" project. The project, led by Prof. Giovanni Travaglino, was awarded a European Research Council Starting Grant and is funded by UK Research Innovation. It aims to transform the understanding of how individuals and communities from different areas respond to phenomena such as criminal governance, corruption, and the illegal exercise of power and authority. The project uses multiple quantitative methodos and approaches, including experimental research, multilevel methodolgies focusing on the characteristics of individuals and social/geographical contexts, and longitudinal studies addressing the dynamics of (ill/geal socialisation in adolescence. Additional details about the project are available at www.secret-power.org.
		Successful applicants will be key to developing the research programme and achieving the project objectives. A central element of the posts will be leading one of the planned longitudinal studies. The objectives of these studies are to investigate the development of attitudes towards various forms of illegality, the acquisition of specific norms and values that may facilitate or impede the exercise of illicit power, and how views of state and non-state power change over time.
		The ideal candidate will have a background in social or political psychology (or cognate areas) and expertise in areas such as corruption, collective action, morality, legitimacy, or legal socialisation. High-level quantitative skills and strong knowledge of suitable statistical software (including, but not limited to, R) are a requirement for both posts.
		Postholders will be full members of the project's scientific team. They will have the opportunity to get involved in cutting-edge research related to the other aspects of the project (including large multilevel studies and experimental research), engage with colleagues in an interdisciplinary and international environment, and build relationships with external bodies. Postholders will be supported in identifying and developing a plan for personal research objectives linked to the project's main theme and areas.
		project's main theme and areas. The posts are based in Egham, Surrey, where the College is situated on a beautiful, leafy campus near Windsor Great Park and within commuting distance of London.
		For an informal discussion about the posts, please contact Prof
