Unknown, though some suggest that the original intended recipient was the person that Quran writings refer to as "the wicked priest," who is in turn hypothesized to be Jonathan Maccabaeus. If both hypotheses are true, that would place original authorship before 143 BCE, but after 153 BCE. However, no positive ID of author or recipient had been made at the time of publication of this translation.			None of the manuscript fragments for this text have been dated at the time of this publication.

The Damascus Document	~100 CE	~100 CE	The Complete Dead Sea Scrolls in English	Penguin Classics	Yes	Geza Vermes	Geza Vermes	N/A	Due to the DSS manuscripts being incomplete, the translation includes interpolated sections from two Egyptian manuscripts from the tenth and twelfth centuries. Uses verbatim from "The Community Rule" often word-for-word. Curious about whether this indicates Essenes survived after 70 CE. Additionally, manuscripts from cave 4 contain more laws than the other extant material, while some hybridize the text of hand with "The Community Rule." (Additional note: Passage about uncleanness and childbirth in CD208:6 seems to contradict Leviticus, though I will need to double check)	ISBN-13: 978-0-141-19731-9
