

Why don't use the Serial Number to get this number ? We can probably say that the number of unit built is about the number of unit sold.

We can use the Serial Number information. Usually, an Apple IIgs serial number looks like : E749YJAA2S6000 (read as E-7-49-YJA-A2S6000).

With

E : Factory code (E=Singapore, NE=Singapore?, CK=Cork Ireland, C=Cork?, ...)

7 : Year of production (7=1987, 8=1988, 9=1989, 0=1990, 1=1991...)

49 : Week number (01-52)

YJA : current # / based on units built this week

A2S6000 : Apple IIgs code

=> more info on s/n at <http://macfaq.org/serial.html>

The 3 letters YJA use a base 34 system : 0-9 A-Z (10+24) where uppercase 'i' and 'o' are missing to avoid confusion with numeric '1' and '0'. Here, Y=32, J=18 and A =10. So $YJA = 32 \cdot (34^2) + 18 \cdot (34^1) + 10 \cdot (34^0) = 37614$ units (at least) built in the beginning of December 1987.

So, with 7 years of production (1986 - 1993), we have to collect enough Apple IIgs serial numbers to cover the 7 years * 52 weeks = 364 weeks. How to get all these serial numbers ? First idea is to google 'A2S600' and get all serial numbers from Ebay auctions or Web sites (<http://www.apple-iiigs.info/collection.php> has already dozen of them). Of course, asking in the newsgroup is a good option because everyone here has 2 or 3 IIgs around.

Even if one week or 2 is missing, we can probably consider that the IIgs production was about the same during one month, so we can compute an average with the two weeks around. The idea to find, for each of the 364 weeks, the biggest 3 digit number to have a good approximation of the maximum number units built this week. The total number of Apple IIgs built is the sum of all the weeks.

As we wrote in the "Speak with data" sheet, Apple publicly announced 1M units sold, we are close to that with the s/n of the keyboard, and far away from that figure with the unit s/n. We may perform new unit s/n calculations based on his message.

Antoine & Olivier

AV 201411

On one hand, s/n collected so far show there have been more than 2.5M IIgs produced
On the other hand, Apple says no more than 1M machines were ever sold

Our calculation is made thanks to the base-34 alphabet (see the readme sheet)
No other data confirm either figure, let's try to imagine how to determine the right number

Factory

IIgs machines come mainly from Singapore
What was the size of the production line?
Were there more than one production line for the IIgs?
Was the production line(s) shared with Macintosh?
How long was the assembly of a machine?
How long was the testing phase of the machine?

Good supply

The IIgs was the first Apple machine with a modern motherboard
It had six specialized chips. Exclude the IWM which was shared with the Mac line.
Were the chips built in Singapore or purchased?
How many ensoniq chips were purchased?
How many Mega II chips were produced?
How many VGC chips were produced?

Apple

Is production data from the 80's available?
Are sales figures available?

Serial number

If the base-34 alphabet is not the right one, which one is used?
Can the s/n be shared with Mac machines?

Peripherals

There were IIgs specific items, let's use their own s/n
What is the highest keyboard s/n we get?
What is the highest Apple Color RGB monitor s/n we get?
What is the highest Apple RAM card s/n we get?
What is the highest mouse s/n we get?

201602 / The former manager of the Apple II division warns us that the decoding wheel is surely wrong: "Since the serial numbers contain a "week" field, there's no reason to expect that the "YJA" digits had to be reset to 000 weekly. It makes more sense for those to be left running to produce monthly totals (and bear in mind that "monthly" may or may not mean the last calendar day of a month...it could have been the last Friday of each month...fiscal months/quarters/years sometimes end weird). Have you tested the data to verify whether or not the YJA fields were reset weekly? If not, that alone could easily skew your totals..."
