[1] Authors show up automatically! The same caveat for fandoms applies here too: fics with more than one author will be counted as one author rather than their own in two separate cells. If you would rather than being counted separately, you can delete the formula in cell A2 and type authors manually.

[2] Here will appear your top ten authors and the respective number of fics/words you have read from them. The % column shows you what percent of the number of total words you've read a given author makes up. If you would like to change this to be based on number of fics or would like to add a column for it, change the denominator to 'Year Stats'!$B$14

[3] Keep it consistent how you type a ship! It doesn't matter if you want to use a ship name (like Ineffible Husbands, Lumity, etc), just as long as it's consistent. Otherwise it will be counted as a new ship!

[4] Even though there are multiple tags in these cells, it's still important as ever to keep consistent how you type a given tag. Again, doesn't matter how you record, as long as it's consistent!

For recording additional tags my personal recommendation is to be selective about which you choose to record so you don't get burnt out on recording. Just one to three per fic is often enough to learn something interesting about yourself!

[5] To copy your formula down, press F4 to lock the cell reference for your range. It should look like $F$2:$F$4$ in this example!

The formula:

```
=countif([Range], ""&[Criteria]"")

Range is the column where your tags are, and criteria is the tag you're counting (should be next to your formula cell!).

[6] To copy your formula down, press F4 to lock the cell reference for your range. It should look like $F$2:$F$4$ in this example!

The formula:

```
=countif([Range], ""&[Criteria]"")

Range is the column where your tags are, and criteria is the tag you're counting (should be next to your formula cell!).

[7] This formula is already set up as you need it to be for this sheet so there is no example. The only thing you have to worry about is inserting your date!
