A tally system, for people who need numbers!

To start, select File > Make a Copy to make your own editable spreadsheet. The one you see right now is mine!

Once you have your own file, only change the COLORED boxes.

If you have begun writing already, write your starting word count in the ORANGE box. It's okay if this number is left at zero!

Write the month's goal in the YELLOW box. The standard goal is fifty thousand!

Put the challenge dates in the GREEN box.

Each day, as you write, paste your manuscript's total current word count into the day's PINK box. This is the TOTAL number of words in your manuscript. Make sure EVERY day has a word count, even if it's the same as the day before's.

If you are using the daily tracker, each morning, move the previous day's word count to the PURPLE box.

Your daily word count will be automatically calculated by subtracting yesterday's word count from today's. To write 50,000 words in 30 days, you will need to average 1667 words per day.

Your Daily Surplus lets you know how close you are to your daily goal. A negative number means you have not hit your goal, and will need to write extra words later to make up. A positive number means tomorrow's workload will be smaller!

Your On-track count shows what your wordcount would be if you had written 1,667 words every day of Nano so far.

To clean up your sheet, you can remove rows below the one you're currently working on. Simply drag your row to the one below it when it's time to enter tomorrow's numbers.

ONLY drag down starting at day-TWO. Day 1 values are special. Do not delete the day-two row.
