RATING	DEFINITIONS
INV <small>invisible</small>	A character, within the episode, that is edited to be irrelevant or insignificant to any of the stories. No confessionals or tribal council questions. Almost absent from the episode. No complexity and no development.
UTR <small>under the radar</small>	A character, within the episode, that is edited to be either under-utilized or deliberately hidden. They may have a role in the story but are being kept out of focus. When the episode ends, the character's overall development is virtually unchanged.
MOR <small>middle of the road</small>	A character, within the episode, that says and does more than a UTR edit, but is lacking in character development. In terms of story, these characters tend towards being a supporting character. Receives moderate levels of game relevant development.
CP <small>complex personality</small>	A character, within the episode, that emerges as a "personality" that is well-rounded and well-developed. We see their strengths and weaknesses and their choices are presented to the audience so that we get an insight into their thinking.
TONE	DEFINITIONS
PP <small>super positive</small>	The character is so unbelievably and overtly positive that it deserves special recognition. The character may get special, rare, heroic, soaring music. Other characters may refer to them in terms that make them seem saintly, heroic, or sympathetic.
P <small>positive</small>	There is significant evidence of editorial footage for the character in the positive direction. Positive (e.g., sympathetic) music paired with a character's words/actions. Other characters speaking about the character in an unambiguously positive way.
Neutral	The edit pairs the character's words/actions with no special musical cues, other characters do not comment on the character in an evaluative way, and the overall narrative does not convey anything about the character that is inherently good or bad.
---	It technically is a type of Neutral Toned edit, but where the player has amounts of notable
