In our experiment, we focus on an approach known as Decision making using game theory. We apply principles from game theory to model the relationships between rating actions, news, market signals and decision making. We postulate the use of design capability indices to facilitate the teams making a ranged set of decisions, instead of specific ones. In the context of currency price realization, a game is a decision making process between multiple investors each of which controls a subset of design variables and seeks to minimize its cost function subject to future forecast constraints. That is, investors act like players in a game; they cooperate to achieve a set of overall goals. End of day prices provided by Morningstar. Corporate Actions data provided by Thomson Reuters.*
